He told the Daily Beast: "The more they talk the more they lose." At issue here is whether Mr Trump is a racist or a xenophobe. This is a problem for everyone.. The problem stems from Mr Trump's embrace of an increasingly extreme set of values, as his attacks on the Khan family and the white supremacists in Charlottesville are clearly visible from all angles. There is no doubt in our minds that these events, and the Republican Party's subsequent reaction that this is an attack on all Americans, played a role in sparking the violent backlash against the president.. If Iran wins the talks later this week, the issue of Syria, the two key stumbling blocks between the two sides, could be on the political agenda for the summit, diplomats say.

A more likely explanation for the events of late is that this president — a man who is in his 40s — is in need of support from white racist fans, as long as those fans remain loyal. But there is no way that these groups have the same influence at a Trump gathering as they do now.
